The Keuneunong Dating and Acehese Society

Darmadi Johan

Winaya Inspirasi Nusantara Foundation, Indonesia

Abstract

The important part of Acehese culture is Keuneunong, especially for the Aneuk Jamee community and the Acehese people as a whole. This ancient practice, in which farming is the main social activity, is strongly correlated with the seasonal calendar. An important part of Keuneunong, which symbolizes the practice's cultural and environmental significance, is the yearly Khanduri Laot rite in lowland Aceh. The purpose of this essay is to examine the cultural and social ramifications of Keuneunong in Acehese society, providing insight into its history, customs, and changing function.

INTRODUCTION

The Acehese society in Indonesia is known for its rich cultural heritage and traditions, one of which is the Keuneunong, a seasonal calendar that holds significant importance in the lives of the Acehese people. This article seeks to explore the cultural and social implications of the Keuneunong ritual in Acehese society (Gaillard, J., Clavé, E., Vibert, O., A., D., Denain, J., Efendi, Y., Grancher, D., Liamzon, C., Sari, D., & Setiawan, R, 2008). The Keuneunong influences various aspects of the Acehese community, including their societal activities, identity, and sense of sociability. By delving into the intricacies of this ritual, we aim to provide a deeper understanding of its role in shaping the cultural landscape of Aceh (Syarifuddin, T., Sholahuddin, A., & Ngabut, R, 2020).
